FIDO'S FLIGHTS OF FANCY

FIDO was such an unhappy little dog. He was unhappy because he wanted to fly. In fact, he wished he could fly so much that he never played with the other little dogs, but spent all of his time with the birds. The birds fluttered their wings to tease him, and Fido chased them. "Someday I'm going to fly," he shouted.

"Dogs don't fly!" the birds laughed. "They have no wings! How can you fly without wings?" And they swooped around and around Fido's head.

Poor Fido stood on his hind legs and waved his front paws wildly up and down. But it was no use. Paws are not wings, and he simply could not lift himself off the ground.

Fido's father tried to comfort him. "Why it's wonderful to be a little dog," he said. "Think of all the fun you can have."

One afternoon, Fido ran to the tree where his friends, the birds, always played together. But this time the tree was empty. Not a single bird was in its branches. Instead, sleeping beneath the tree, was a fat, furry cat! Fido knew at once that the cat had chased the birds. Suddenly, he heard a tiny chirp, and saw that one of the baby sparrows was caught in a thicket and could not get out. The cat stirred in his sleep. Fido did not know what to do. If the cat awakened, the bird would be in great danger.

Then Fido had an idea. He began running round and round in circles, barking as loud as he could. When the cat opened its eyes, Fido suddenly stopped running and began to snarl, making his face look as ferocious as possible.

The terrified cat jumped to his feet, and his fur seemed electric with fear. He mewed excitedly and backed up against the tree trunk. Then he dug his nails into the bark and scrambled to the very top limb. Fido quickly made his way to the thicket, and with his paw he moved the branches that held the tiny sparrow, and quickly the bird fluttered his wings and flew away.

When it was dark, the frightened feline scrambled down from the tree, and ran away as fast as his legs could carry him.

Next morning, the birds came back. They flew round and round Fido's head, fluttered their wings and sang to him.

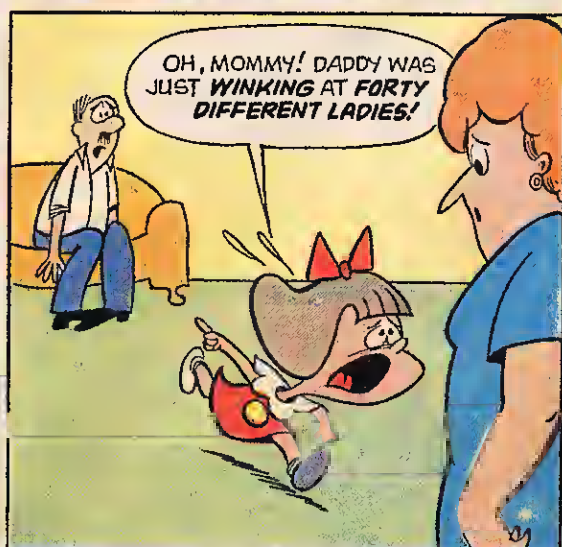

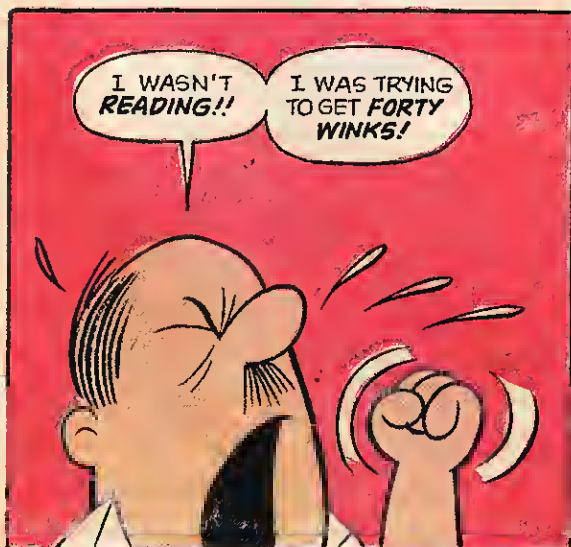

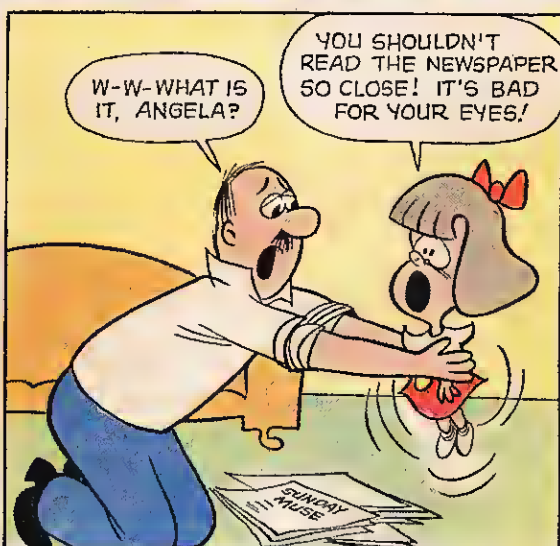

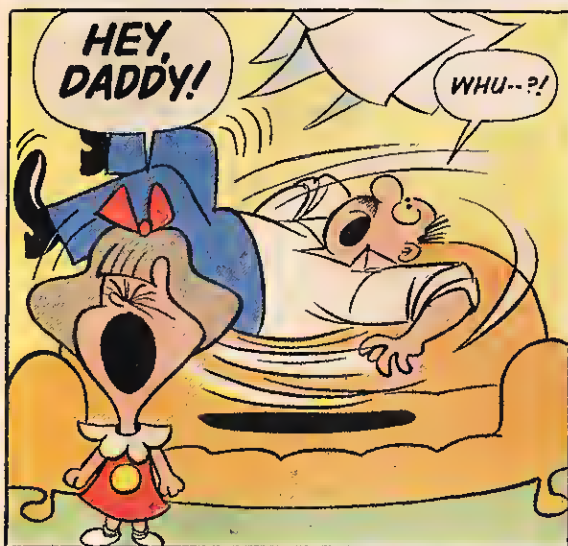

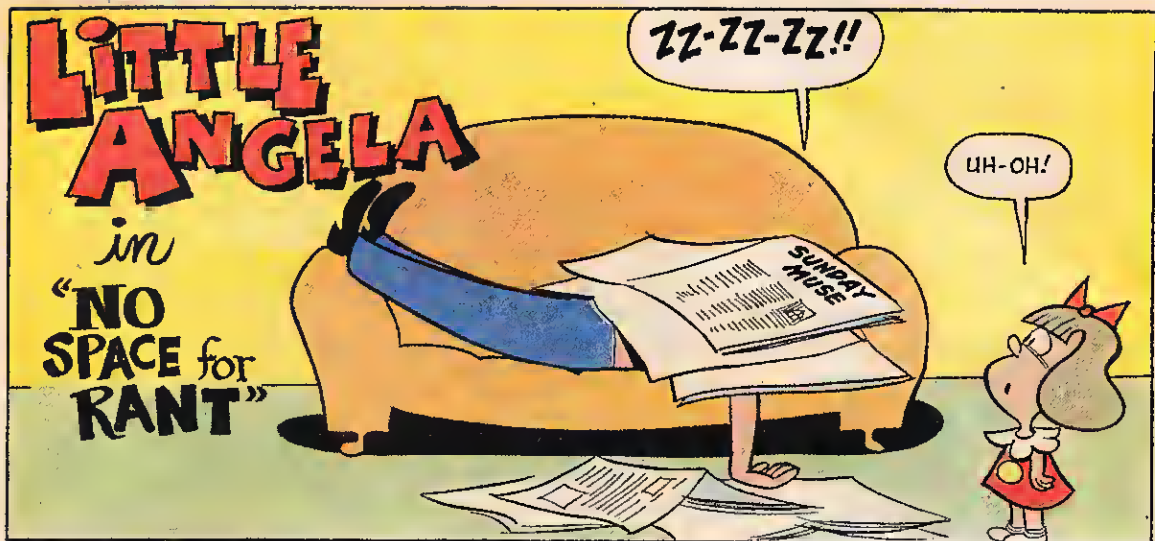

"You saved Sally Sparrow's life," they twittered admiringly. "And now we have our beautiful tree all to ourselves once more!"

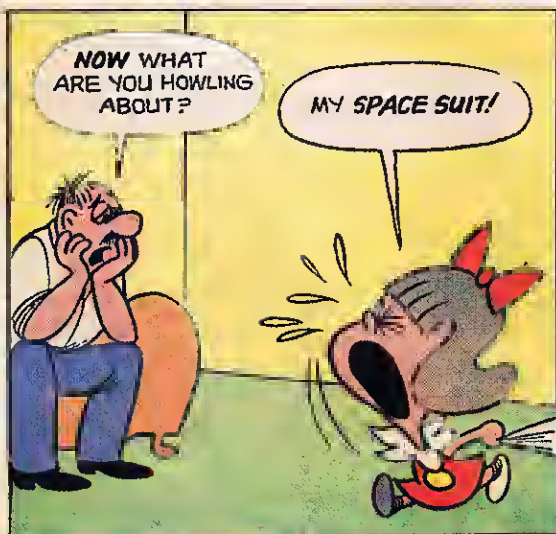

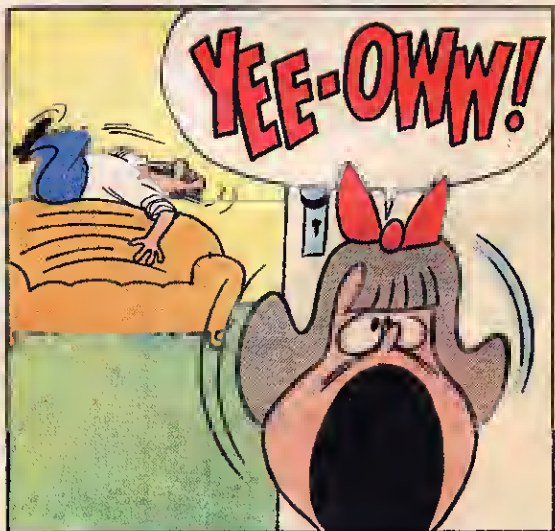

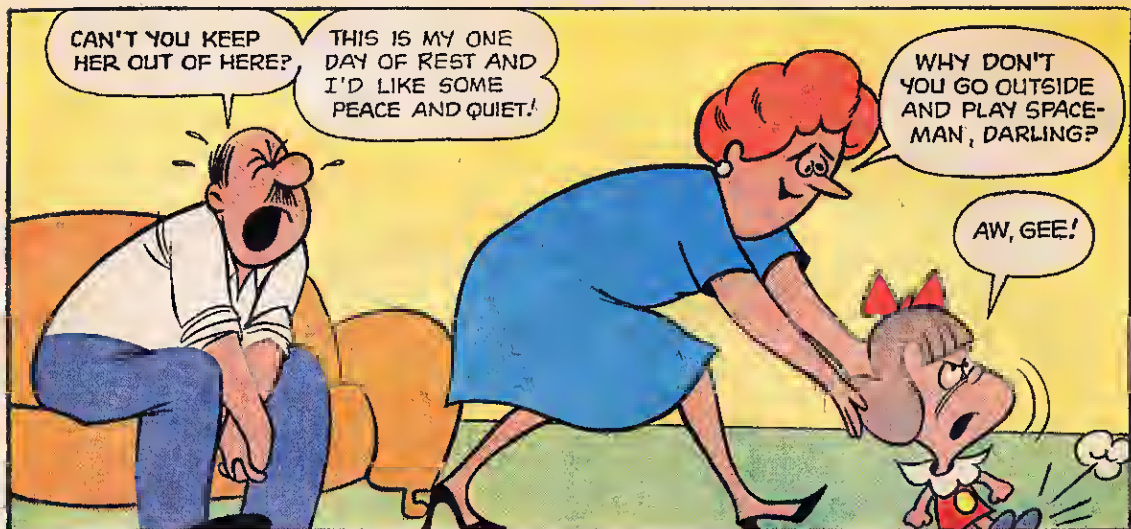

"How wonderful it must be to be a dog," cried one little bird wistfully. "Just imagine—CATS are afraid of you!"

All at once, Fido was deliriously happy! It was wonderful to be a dog! It didn't matter that he couldn't fly.—He could do other things, just as marvelous!
